

Facilitating Hope, Healing and Fulfillment

Andrew Renick is known for the welcoming and personable approach he takes with each of his clients. He possesses a great deal of compassion and a deep sense of care for those he interacts with. Andrew is smart and direct in his approach when working with his clients. Andrew received his undergraduate training and first Masters degree (MPA) at the University of Western Ontario (Western University) in London, Ontario, Canada. He later returned to school to complete a Master of Social Work degree from Brigham Young University.

Andrew has worked with various populations including couples, children, and families under the umbrella of child protective services, teenagers, and young adults in long-term residential treatment, and those in prison systems. In all of these venues, as well as in private practice, Andrew's passion has consistently been working with couples.

Andrew is experienced in the treatment of anxiety, depression, trauma, grief, addiction, parent-child issues, relational concerns, as well as mood, personality and behavioral problems in children, adolescents, and adults. Andrew specializes in relationship building and repair with a particular interest in engaging men and fathers. His approach is emotionally focused and trauma-informed. Andrew believes the most precious gift we can offer ourselves and those that love us is vulnerability. From that place of mutual individual vulnerability springs the most powerful and resilient relationships. He strives to assist all his clients to be truly seen so that they can feel fully accepted and loved and offer that to others in return.

Andrew places high value on service, social justice, the dignity and worth of the person, human relationships, integrity, and competence. In his free time Andrew enjoys watching good film and television, woodworking, working on his car, and playing with his wife of 10 years and their 4 children.
