

Facilitating Hope, Healing and Fulfillment

Sydney Christensen is a graduate student at Colorado Christian University pursuing a Master of Arts degree in Clinical Mental Health Counseling with an emphasis in Marriage and Family Therapy. Sydney is passionate about working with couples and families – helping them strengthen their relationships, navigate challenges, and cultivate deeper connections.

Sydney draws from a variety of therapeutic approaches to meet the unique needs of her clients, including Family and Marital Therapy, Emotionally Focused Therapy (EFT), Internal Family Systems (IFS), Narrative Therapy, Person-Centered Therapy, Cognitive Behavioral Therapy (CBT), and Gottman Method Couples Therapy. She believes in the healing power of love, acceptance, empathy, and compassion to bring about meaningful change. Sydney values creating a safe, empathetic, and collaborative environment where individuals, couples, and families can explore their stories, heal relational wounds, and discover new ways of relating to one another.

While still completing her graduate training, Sydney is committed to integrating evidence-based practices with genuine compassion and a deep respect for each client's personal journey. Her goal is to walk alongside those she serves as they work toward restoration, growth, and meaningful change in their relationships.

Outside of her academic and clinical work, Sydney loves spending time with her husband and family, being outside and staying active. She believes in living life with intention, curiosity, and joy – values she hopes to inspire in those she works with.

What People Are Saying:

"The counselors were very compassionate understanding. They helped me attain the mental and emotional tools to be able to effectively communicate with others. I am able manage stressful situations successfully. I highly recommend."
